EDUCATION

Education is among the most important issues facing Hawaiians today. Many Hawaiians see attaining appropriate educational opportunities as the key to individual self-sufficiency and collective self-determination. Unfortunately, too many Hawaiians have not had adequate access to quality educational experiences, nor have they been able to obtain the types of education that will allow them to break out of the cycles of poverty, dependence and low self-esteem.

Recently, Hawaiian educators, parents and communities have begun to seriously address the wide range of educational problems facing Hawaiians. Joined by Hawaiian language and culture specialists, they have established programs that enrich haumana and their 'ohana by providing strong preparation for academic achievement. Culturally relevant, high quality educational initiatives draw on the resources of data-based research, as well as the wisdom of Hawai'i's kūpuna, and collectively share curricula, materials and assessment tools. Such programs often function as the kahua for knowledge about how to effectively sustain and enhance "best practices" in Hawaiian education.

Members of the Native Hawaiian educational community, and the students and 'ohana they serve, work tirelessly to encourage life-long learning, increase cultural knowledge and Hawaiians' sense of identity, while mitigating the dire economic circumstances of Hawaiians who have been poorly prepared by the mainstream educational system to become productive citizens and active members of a reinvigorated Hawaiian nation.
